INTERNET SOURCES - Local & National

beyond.com

Claims to be the "largest network of niche career communities" on the Net. It hooks together different organizations like PRJobForce.com and PhillyJobs.com all in one place.

boston.com/jobs/

Search for MA jobs by Region/Town, Industry, Commute or Employer. Includes Monster.com tools and resource tie in [registration required].

careerbuilder.com

"Web's biggest job site" with more than 23 million visitors a month. The company has been around since 1995, and has developed an incredible network of listing sources and job search centers.

craigslist

www.craigslist.org

Gives those who are focused on searching for jobs within their communities an easy way to look. It might be one of the least-polished entities listed here, but the sheer number of local job listings makes up for it. Job information from big and small companies, public and private organizations.

flipdog.com

As one of the biggest job sites on the Web, it distinguishes itself by focusing on features such as status (which shows how many times one's resume has been viewed) and the ability to block companies from seeing your resume.

HotJobs

<http://hotjobs.yahoo.com/>

Shows jobs from employer Web sites only. This is supposed to eliminate duplicate listings and show opportunities that are not posted on other job boards. Works as an aggregator for listings from major job Web sites, company Web sites, associations, and other online sources. Simplicity and ease of use are its best features.

Hound

A service formed by a nonprofit consortium of U.S. corporations like IBM and Dell. Ideal if looking for corporate job listings.

Claims to be "the world's first Internet recruitment service."

Uses an active approach to help employers and recruiting teams of all sizes find their candidates. The company calls its method "social recruiting," and services 24 different job categories.

Job searcher services include a resumé bank, auto-notify, resumé postings on affiliated websites.

Downside - $20 registration fee.

Put together by the New York Public Library, this is a comprehensive list of resource that is very well organized – select "Education & Employment" to get started

Owns a lot of smaller niche sites like BioSpace.com and MedHunters.com. Its expansive niche database allows users to find compatible job listings more easily than with general sites.

Specializes in online classifieds, includes a job classifieds section that finely cuts job opportunities down to job title, category, industry, and company. Similar to "Indeed", as it also aggregates listings from major job Web sites, newspapers, company Web sites, and associations. Additionally, the site goes a little deeper and allows users to send their resumes out for posting on five other sites for free.

Focus is on hourly employment only. The site has partnered with companies like 7 Eleven, Red Lobster, and AMF, to bring the most up-to-date hourly job openings.

Free search engine makes the job-search process more personalized. Users input their work experience and qualifications and the site matches results to what info they have given. Trovix also has an innovative feature called Job Map, which allows you to type in your location and see on Google Maps how many jobs are available in area.

One of the newest sites to take advantage of social media, TweetMyJobs supplies Twitter users with instantaneous job listings that are derived from TweetMyJobs' Job Channels.

The official job site for the U.S. government.
